📄 Other information statements

Depending on your employment type you may also need to be given other information statements when you start work or enter into a fixed term contract.

🐷 Your pay

Your minimum pay rates are in your award or enterprise agreement. If there is no award or agreement for your job, you must get at least the National Minimum Wage. Minimum pay rates are usually updated yearly.

Find out what you should get at fairwork.gov.au/minimum-wages

National minimum wage From 1 July 2023	 $23.23/hour or $882.80/week (based on a 38 hour week) for full-time employees	 $23.23/hour for part-time employees	 $29.04/hour for casual employees
--	--	--	---

This is the adult minimum rate for employees with no award or enterprise agreement. Lower rates may apply to juniors, apprentices, trainees and employees with disability whose disability affects their productivity. Lower rates may also apply under some awards, for example rates that apply for a limited time after an employee starts their job. You can't agree to be paid less than the minimum pay rates that apply for your job.

Flexibility

After 12 months employment, you may have the right to make a written request for flexible working arrangements. This includes if you're pregnant, 55 or over, a carer, have a disability, are experiencing family and domestic violence, are supporting a member of your immediate family or household who is experiencing family and domestic violence, or are the parent of, or have caring responsibilities for, a child of school age or younger. Employers need to follow certain rules for responding to a request for flexible work arrangements, including responding in writing within 21 days.

Find out more about these rules at:

fairwork.gov.au/flexibility

You and your employer can also negotiate an individual flexibility arrangement. This would change how certain terms in your award or enterprise agreement apply to you. An individual flexibility arrangement must be a genuine choice – it can't be a condition of employment – and it must leave you better off overall.

Right of entry

Union officials with an entry permit can enter the workplace to talk to workers that they're entitled to represent, or to investigate suspected safety issues or breaches of workplace laws.

They must comply with certain requirements, such as notifying the employer, and can inspect or copy certain documents. Strict privacy rules apply to the permit holder, their organisation and your employer to protect your personal information. Find out more at:

fwc.gov.au/entry-permits

Agreement making

Enterprise agreements are negotiated between an employer (or one or more related employers), their employees, and any employee representatives (for example, a union). This process is called 'bargaining' and has to follow set rules. The Fair Work Commission checks and approves agreements. For information about making, varying, or terminating an enterprise agreement visit:

fwc.gov.au/agreements

Transfer of business

If a transfer of business occurs, your employment with your old employer ends. If you're employed by the new employer within 3 months to do the same (or similar) job, some of your entitlements might carry over to the new employer. This may happen if, for example, the business is sold or work is outsourced. Find out more at:

fairwork.gov.au/transfer-of-business

Protections at work

All employees have protections at work. You can't be treated differently or worse because you have or exercise a workplace right, for example, the right to request flexible working arrangements, take leave or make a complaint or enquiry about your employment.

You have the right to join a union or choose not to, and to take part in lawful industrial activity or choose not to.

You have the right to talk about (or not talk about) your current or past pay, and the terms and conditions of employment that would be needed to work out your pay (such as your hours of work). You can also ask other employees the same thing (about their pay and terms and conditions of employment) but they don't have to tell you.

You also have protections when temporarily absent from work due to illness or injury, and from discrimination, bullying, sexual harassment, coercion, misrepresentation, sham contracting, and undue influence or pressure.

Find out more at:

fairwork.gov.au/protections

fairwork.gov.au/bullying-harassment

Ending employment

When your employment ends, your final pay should include all outstanding entitlements, such as wages and unused annual leave and long service leave.

You may be entitled to notice of termination, or pay instead of notice. If you're dismissed for serious misconduct, you're not entitled to notice. If you resign you may have to give your employer notice. To check if notice is required and what should be in your final pay visit:

fairwork.gov.au/ending-employment

If you think your dismissal was unfair or unlawful, you have 21 calendar days to lodge a claim with the Fair Work Commission. Rules and exceptions apply. Find out more at:

Who is a casual employee?

You are a casual employee if you meet all the following criteria:

- you are offered a job
- the employer makes no firm advance commitment that the work will continue indefinitely with an agreed pattern of work, and
- you accept the offer knowing that there is no firm advance commitment and become an employee.

Whether you're a casual employee is assessed at the time you are offered and accept the job.

What is 'no firm advance commitment'?

To work out if your employer made no firm advance commitment when offering you the job, only 4 factors are to be considered. They are whether:

- ▶ your employer can choose to offer you work and it's your choice whether to work or not
- ▶ you'll be offered work when your employer needs you to work
- ▶ your employment is described as casual
- ▶ you'll be paid a casual loading or a specific pay rate for casual employees.

There isn't 1 deciding factor and you don't need all 4 of them for there to be 'no firm advance commitment'. It's about weighing up the factors that are there (and those that aren't) and deciding whether overall your employer was or wasn't intending to make a firm advance commitment.

Example of 'no firm advance commitment'

Priya is offered a job as a shop assistant. The job was advertised as a casual position.

The shop owner says Priya will need to work when the shop is busy or other staff are on leave. When business is quiet, Priya will get less work. Priya will be offered shifts a week in advance and the shifts will vary week-to-week. Priya can decline shifts if she wants to. Priya's pay rate will include a casual loading. Priya accepts the job.

There was 'no firm advance commitment' in Priya's situation. Her employer didn't commit to giving Priya ongoing work. The shop owner made it clear that Priya's shifts could vary, and that Priya wasn't obligated to accept shifts. The job was advertised as casual and Priya will be paid a casual rate of pay. Because this was clear at the time Priya was offered and accepted the job, she is considered a casual employee.

Note: Sometimes casual employees work a regular pattern of hours. This doesn't mean they're permanent (full-time or part-time), but if the arrangements continue, they might be entitled to casual conversion in the future (usually after 12 months).

How do I become a permanent employee if I'm a casual employee?

Under the National Employment Standards (NES), some casual employees have the right to become a permanent (full-time or part-time) employee. This is known as 'casual conversion'.

Some casual employees must be offered casual conversion by their employer while others can only request it. You must have completed 12 months of work and meet other criteria.

The next page outlines when your employer has to offer you casual conversion, and when you are entitled to request it.

Small businesses

If you are employed by a small business (fewer than 15 employees), your employer does not have to offer you casual conversion. However, in some circumstances you're still entitled to request it.

The next page outlines when you are entitled to request casual conversion if you work for a small business.

In writing

Under the NES, all offers, requests, refusals, and responses for casual conversion must be in writing. 'In writing' can include handwritten, printed, and electronic (for example, email) formats.

Some casual employees will be covered by awards and agreements with additional casual conversion entitlements. Go to www.fairwork.gov.au/casual for more information.

Does my employer have to offer me casual conversion?

Only businesses with 15 or more employees have to offer casual conversion to their casual employees.

They have to offer you casual conversion if you meet all the following criteria:

- ✓ you've been employed by them for 12 months
- ✓ you've worked a regular pattern of hours on an ongoing basis for at least the last 6 months, and
- ✓ you could continue working that regular pattern of hours as a permanent employee without significant changes.

Your employer doesn't have to offer you casual conversion if one of the following applies to you:

- ✗ there are reasonable grounds for your employer not to offer you casual conversion, or
- ✗ you haven't worked a regular pattern of hours for at least the last 6 months.

What your employer needs to do

- If you are eligible for casual conversion – Make the offer to you, in writing, within 21 days after your 12-month anniversary.
- If they aren't offering casual conversion – Tell you the reasons why in writing, within 21 days after your 12-month anniversary.

What you need to do

- If your employer offers you casual conversion – Respond in writing within 21 days. You can accept or decline the offer.
- If you disagree with their decision not to offer you casual conversion – Follow the steps outlined in the 'What if there is a disagreement?' section on the next page.

Example of 'regular pattern of hours'

Alex is a casual employee who works every Friday and Saturday night at a restaurant on a regular basis. His hours and days don't change.

Over a 6-month period, Alex misses 2 shifts due to illness. By agreement with his employer he also takes 1 week off during uni exams.

Even though Alex has taken some time off, this still meets the definition of a 'regular pattern of hours'.

Can I request casual conversion?

You are entitled to request casual conversion if you meet all the following criteria:

- ✓ you've worked for the business for at least 12 months and 21 days (12 months if you work for a small business)
- ✓ you've worked a regular pattern of hours on an ongoing basis for at least the last 6 months
- ✓ you could continue working that pattern of hours as a permanent employee without significant changes, and
- ✓ during the last 6 months you haven't:
 - refused an offer of casual conversion
 - been told you aren't being offered casual conversion due to reasonable grounds, or
 - made a request for casual conversion that was refused on reasonable grounds.

What you need to do

- If you are eligible and want to request casual conversion – Make the request in writing.

What your employer needs to do

- If they are granting your request – Consult with you and respond in writing within 21 days of receiving your request.
- If they are refusing your request on reasonable grounds – Consult with you and tell you the reasons why in writing within 21 days of receiving your request. If you meet the criteria again in 6 months, you can make another request then.

? What are 'reasonable grounds'?

What counts as 'reasonable grounds' will depend on your circumstances and your employer's circumstances.

They can include that within the next 12 months:

- your position won't exist
- your hours of work will significantly reduce
- the days or times your employer needs you to work will change significantly, and you won't be available to work the revised schedule.

Reasonable grounds can also include that making the offer or granting the request would not comply with a recruitment or selection process required by or under a Commonwealth, State or Territory law.

What if I disagree with my employer about casual conversion?

If you and your employer have a disagreement about casual conversion, including the rules and requirements for making (or not making) a request or an offer, there are steps you can take to resolve it.

Depending on your circumstances, you may be able to have someone to support or represent you through the dispute process (which could include a union entitled to represent you).

Step 1. First, check if you're covered by an award or agreement. Not sure? Visit www.fairwork.gov.au/awards and www.fairwork.gov.au/agreements

- If you are covered by an award or agreement, you need to follow the process that it sets out for dealing with disputes about the National Employment Standards (NES). See the 'Who can help?' section below if you need further help.
- If you're not covered by an award or agreement, move to step 2.

Step 2. If you aren't covered by an award or agreement you need to check if your employment contract or any other kind of written agreement has a process for dealing with disputes about the NES or casual conversion.

- If it does, you need to follow the process that it sets out for dealing with the dispute. See the 'Who can help?' section below if you need further help.
- If it doesn't, move to step 3.

Step 3. If the dispute resolution processes in steps 1 and 2 don't apply to you, try to resolve the disagreement directly with your employer by discussing it with them (you can use our free courses linked below to help you do this). If you can't resolve the issue this way, see the 'Who can help?' section below for where you can get help.
